An interdisciplinary approach to study of the biology of vascular inflammation in its most relevant clinical context is used to train postdoctoral fellows, residents, and graduate students in research leading to the development of improved care for patients with cardiovascular disease. The Program is being organized to support the training of 5 trainees per year. The research opportunities available to fellows/residents/students are in four broad areas: 1. Molecular Epidemiology and Genetics of Vascular Inflammation; 2. Hemostasis, thrombosis and coagulation; 3. Cell Biology; and 4. Vascular Injury: Healing, Repair, and Functional Remodeling. Faculty has been selected to reflect the diversity of disciplines, approaches to research, and focus on vascular injury and repair in clinical medicine. The 23
