nanoscope software 6.13 download googleQ. Memcached query result caching with Pusher I'm having trouble with caching (or am I making a silly mistake?) I'm using Pusher and Memcached (from Pusher's PHP docs) to cache results from a query (we're using it for twitter search). It's working fine as long as the relevant query returns results and the cache is up to date, but when the query doesn't return results and the cache is outdated, the query crashes with an "Error response from daemon: can't extract response from cache service" (followed by the Pusher server error page). The problem seems to be that Pusher is making the query and then leaving it in the cache. I've tried passing an empty value to the 'tweets' parameter for the query, but it doesn't work. My code looks like this: $twitter_search = new Pusher($APPKEY, 'SECRETKEY', array('auth' => true)); $twitter_search->connect(); $twitter_search->find($PUSHER_APP_CLIENT_ID, $PUSHER_APP_SECRET_KEY, $twitter_search->query($query, $offset, $limit, array('tweets' => 'some value'))); Anyone seen this behaviour before? I'll be making a test page soon to see if the cache is being purged. A: Memcached is being replaced by Redis in the next release. So if you are using the latest version of Pusher you will not be able to use the old memcached method. A: I encountered this problem by a mistake with Pusher. If you are using the CURL PHP Library try to pass your lib as a parameter into CURLOPT_OPTS: CURLOPT_USERPWD => "username:password"; CURLOPT_POST => true; CURLOPT_POSTFIELDS =>
