I have an RDD, for example, called "X". How to I print the first 1000 rows of the "X" RDD? How can I make sure that the first 1000 rows that I print are not all the rows of the RDD "X"? Thanks! A: Try: X.take(1000) That will return just the first 1000 entries. Note that this is a lazy implementation and if you try to pull more entries before it has been set, the function will still execute. To actually discard the extra entries, use limit() or paginate() If you only want to print rows, you could use something like this: X.rdd.take(1000).foreach(println) A: You can use take or limit. For more information, check: Q: Dealing with multiple types of objects on single web page I am creating a website where I need to insert some other users' social profiles at the same time as mine. I was thinking I could save them in mySQL and just have them return a small preview of what they look like. The problem I'm having is, the data returned is different to what I want. I need to either store all the data returned in 1 string, or return a'small' portion of the information for each profile. EG: All of the profiles should be displayed as: "Facebook: " "Twitter: @jsmith" "Website: " But, I need only
