Health food and supplements information delivery systems: a service provider's perspective. The growth of health food and supplements market has been paralleled with the development of new information technology. This paper presents a detailed analysis of a current Health Information Systems (HIS) in the German health care context. In particular, various issues and common functions of current and emerging HIS models are discussed and analyzed. The paper also provides a general conceptual framework for the analysis of HIS as well as an in-depth discussion of the particular characteristics and functions of a HFSIS. The paper illustrates how a health care provider can use HIS in different types of health care organizations. The discussion of HIS is based on an analysis of the current delivery model in Germany, from the perspective of the health care provider (e.g. regional hospitals and community practices). Abusive spouses may be sexually aroused by the fear of death. The majority of people who die violently in the home are killed by either spouse or their partner, a new study by The University of Hong Kong finds. The results, published in the British Journal of Psychiatry, confirm what some researchers have suspected -- that domestic violence is related to sexual trauma, but is more than just a sexual crime. "The violence may be seen as a way of strengthening the relationship by controlling the partner, which increases the relationship satisfaction in the abuser," says Professor Tui Hsin Cheng, a psychiatrist and the study's lead author. "We tend to believe that violent behaviour can only be initiated by the victim. But when the victim acts violently, the partner may retaliate, creating a vicious cycle of violence." The researchers analyzed the records of 142 men and 83 women from a Hong Kong hospital who had been hospitalised between 1977 and 1996 after being attacked in their homes. All of them had an average age of 35 and were of Chinese or Indian origin. Sixty-nine percent of the women had been abused by the man, 71% by the husband. Half of the women were killed in the attacks, while the other half were killed elsewhere. The men who killed their partners tended to be younger than those who attacked and killed a stranger or other person. Interestingly, some of the men who killed their partners were themselves killed, while many of 6d1f23a050
